Models of German aeroplanes were used by a Canadian Royal Air Force squadron in their final gunnery test. The size that a real plane appears in the sight indicates the range. This squadron is being trained for army co-operation. The men fired short bursts on their twin-Brownings before taking the air.

Lysanders are specially built for reconnaissance and army co-operation. They can fly slower than any other aircraft in the service, as well as landing and taking off at very slow speed.

Australia gave evidence of the Empire air effort when her Premier Mr. Menzies, (an amateur cine-photographer by the way) visited an Australian coastal command station.

These airmen have made scores of patrols half across the Atlantic. Even young Australians aren't taken in by politicians' tricks.

More Empire airmen. Canadians again. Highly efficient engineers and mechanics keep their Hurricanes in fighting trim - always tuned up for battle. They also make quick repairs when bullets have ripped wings or fuselage.

(GV) In British towns that have been bombed people are demanding that we shall bomb German towns. In its effect on the German people one bomb on Germany, especially in Berlin, is worth ten elsewhere.

We concentrate on military objectives but let us remember that in modern war the greatest military objective is people. When we knock hell out of Berlin, then Germans will begin to realise what they are up against.
