Canadians now in training near Aldershot were paid an informal visit by the King and Queen. Their Majesties saw some officers and men whom they met on their tour of the Dominion two years ago. Anti-tank guns and all the now familiar army equipment were shown and demonstrated. For the Queen the occasion had the added interest that some of the units visited were Scottish Canadians.

Although the King must have seen scores of training camps since the war broke out he did have one new experience this time, his first ride in a Bren-carrier, over a mile of rough country.

(TOWARDS END OF SCENE) Till the job is finished the Canadians will stay this side of the Atlantic to fight for King, Empire and Freedom.
