

FLASHES.

Aboard S.S. Argentina, anchored off Plymouth, were the Duke and Duchess of Windsor. They were on the way from America to France and for three hours, while the ship lay within sight of the Devon coast the Ex-King and his wife posed for Newsreels and the Press. Reporters learned that H.R.H. will soon be coming to England. He very much wishes to see Queen Mary. It is nine years since Her Majesty and the Duke last met. For the present it was hail and farewell to the Duke and Duchess.

Another war secret is out, the Frog-men. Self contained divers, with their own breathing apparatus, they're ~~not~~ independent of any ship. They learned their job in a swimming bath. Strong swimmers only were accepted.

Frog-men are known to have sunk two cruisers and three cargo-ships by attaching mines to them. On D-Day they cleared the invasion beaches of under-water obstacles before the landing craft nosed in. If the enemy had known about it ~~they~~^{he} might have distracted their attention with mermaids. Under water cable cutting was child's play to them. Altogether the Frog-men did a fine job.

At a Chicago Hotel a ~~lucky~~ local business man got married to Betty a^Hutton. After going to the altar many times in pictures Betty was now the heroine in the real thing.

Ted Briskin is the name of the lucky man, envied by millions of Betty's admirers as he signed her up for a life contract.

Though it was in Chicago there was quite a Hollywood atmosphere about the wedding breakfast. Telegrams numbered over a thousand. All the best to ~~both~~ the happy
