. U BOATS TAKE FINAL DIVE

THE CLASS B RELEASE SCHEWS WILL CONTINUE BUT AT 15

The first six of the hundred German submarines to be disposed of by sinking, set out from Loch Ryan, to be towed to their ocean grave off Northern Ireland. It called for first rate seamanship to get towlines on the U-boats and take them so the North Channel into the Atlantic. It was blowing half a gale and there was a good swell. Something between three and four knots was the maximum safe speed and even then one of the U-boats broke away. It was presumed to be sunk. At the sinking ground, a hundred miles North west of Donnegal, one of our destroyers opened fire ong the sitting targets.

(second captain) They were not all destroyed by gunfire. Some were sent to the bottom with explosive charges attached to the hull. It all seems a waste of good steel and equipment but the Admiralty decided that to sining the vessels was the best course.
