The Duke of Edinburgh's first engagement in Glasgow was to open the Scottish Dairy Show at Kelvin Hall. His Royal Highness remarked that though it was at first sight strange to hold the show in such a great industrial city it was a wonderful reminder to towns people that they depended Manhana No food came into the on the country for their foods manifestamentaling kitchen that was not grown or raised on the land. In livestock Scotland was making a great contribution to feeding the people.

In the City Chambers Banqueting Hall the Duke received the Freedom of the City of Glasgow Lord Provost Thomas A. Kerr.
