

MADRID ELECTIONS.

224

Election time in Spain is a time of excitement when the streets are plastered with placards urging the public to vote for the left wing or the right wing or the centre. It sounds like a football match. Señor Alcalá Zamora, the President, voted with his family but the ex-president, of the Catalan Left Party, did not vote. He was in prison. The difference between elections abroad and elections in England, is that in England, the politicians wait until they're actually in Parliament before they start to push you around, but in Spain they do it on the same day. day of the election

FOOTBALL.

Sixty-two thousand fans were able to watch the mid-week replay between Arsenal and Newcastle. Newcastle are the team in stripes. The first excitement came when Newcastle gave away a penalty for hands, and Bastin banged it in. Arsenal one up gave a great kick to the London crowd. In the second half Hulme got in a shot at the Newcastle goal -- it was saved and then Beasley raced in to put Arsenal two up. Now watch the trip that sent Bastin sprawling. Another penalty gave Arsenal a 3-- nil victory.

CHELSEA v. FULHAM.

Chelsea and Fulham met at Stamford Bridge . . . Fulham in white shirts. Fulham hit the net in the first minute, but it was an offside verdict. After that, no score, but the game was very vigorous.
