

DIPLOMATS, ETC.

We take you to the East End for a glimpse of the activities of the Duke of Kent, who spent three hours touring the occupational centres organised by the Social Service Council. The Duke's hand is still bandaged as a result of his recent operation. It seemed to be a ~~plea~~ pleasure as well as a duty as His Royal Highness went from club to club --- talking to scores of unemployed men and casual labourers. The Duke inspected and admired the handicraft of these people who find in the Social Service Centres, not only an outlet for ~~the~~ their skill, but also a remedy for too much unhappily enforced leisure.

Wherever he went, the Duke was received with rapturous cheers.

Well done

lost