KANE v WEISS.

Peter Kane of Golborne met Ernst Weiss of Austria in a ten-round international contest at Harringay --- and the English boy was the winner on points. Kane, wearing light trunks with a black stripe, was slightly the shorter of the two, giving away an inch in height and a couple of pounds in weight --- but he's a well-built lad with nearly all the qualities of a great little fighter.. From the first it was a tearaway scrap, with Kane doing most of the hitting. He was always on the offensive and Weiss, though fighting gamely, was always on the retreat. In the ~~middle~~ ^{middle} rounds the Austrian ^{had} more of the fight than he had at the start, but Kane was always in the picture and he always looked a winner. Both boys took a lot of punishment, but it was Kane who was piling up most of the points and there was no doubt about it when the referee held up his hand. Peter Kane was the winner --- and we shall look upon him as a likely bantam.

In the third round Kane appeared to hit low accidentally, & was cautioned by the referee.
