

CARDIFF AGRICULTURAL SHOW.

473

His Royal Highness the Duke of Kent attended the opening of the Royal Agricultural ~~Shaw~~ Society Show at Cardiff. He was greeted on arrival by the Society's President, the Earl of Plymouth, who took the royal visitor on an extensive tour of the exhibits. ~~One of the most attractive was the Flower Show ---~~ the Duke spent a considerable time admiring the lovely examples of still life, but for a moving picture ~~we turn to the beauty parade~~ While the bulls are working the pig is looking for the refreshment tent.

Another event that delights the eye of town and countryman alike --- the shire horses. The pig is still looking for the refreshment tent.

A novel and particularly interesting section of the Cardiff show was that devoted to pit ponies. They are not really ponies, but a mixture of mountain pony and carthorse. They start work underground at the age of four, ~~years~~ and although some of them here have spent sixteen years in the pits, all these creatures have a wonderful record of health and vitality. ~~It is the Duke~~ ~~gives a replica of~~ but as ~~it is~~ right ~~mix~~ up here it's a little bit difficult to know what to do with it. Haven't you found that refreshment tent?

To close a show that breathes the air of the countryside over all our towns and cities --- the ~~riding~~ ^{riding} competitions --- horse and ~~riding~~ ^{riding} giving a nearly faultless display that never fails to please. ~~That~~ That's all there is. There's nothing to do now except find the refreshment tent.
