Wu-hang, in the ~~right~~ neighbourhood of Hankow --- a peaceful city. Till the whone of syrens gives warning of approaching bombers.

Terrified Chinese run helter skelter for safety. <sup>While airplanes</sup> ~~anti-aircraft guns fight duels in the sky the streets are suddenly empty.~~ ~~recessed doorways they~~ watch the duel between airplanes and Awestruck spectators watch from the shelter of doorways this drama that means life or death to them. ~~anti-aircraft guns.~~ All clear! These ~~that~~ have escaped death in one more raid over China, ~~come back on to the streets and~~ ~~resume the life that to them is normal --- till the next time.~~ But where those bombs have hit, there remains a terrible scar across the fair face of the city --- this is a picture of China's agony.

Japan has not escaped scot free. In Tokyo, home of many of those pilots who deal out death, Nature has taken her toll. China had her floods from Yellow River --- now Nippon's capital under many days of rain lies partly buried beneath a rushing torrent. Turn to Manchukuo. On the Soviet border dispute has arisen between Japan and Russia over the territory of Changkufeng. The Soviet has spoken with men and guns and planes --- Japan is anxious for peace.
