Leicester City took the field first at Stamford Bridge for their match against Chelsea --- and the home team gave a highly satisfactory account of themselves. They won their match by three goals to nil --- and that's always a good thing to do on the home ground because then the spectators know they're getting value for money. This was a brisk game, played in lovely sunshine. Now that winter is on the way we seem to be getting a nice bit of summer. Three goals to nil was the sum total of victory by the white-shirted pensioners. Here comes one of them --- a throw-in sent the ball to Mills, who headed past goalie McLaren. The spectators decided that the game was not any too lively, but afterwards the pitch was invaded by local talent. George Allison paid 14,000 for Bryn Jones but a talent scout here might pick up a few young ones in exchange for a couple of cough drops.
