

FAROUK AND GREEK KING.

There was a naval occasion at Alexandria when Farouk the young king of Egypt attended the Royal Yacht Club Race. ^{The British} Home Fleet was there under the command of Admiral Sir Dudley Pound, Admiral of the Home Fleet in the Harbour at ~~Judly Pond~~. It was a ~~small~~ regatta organized to celebrate King Farouk's wedding, & incidentally the king received a gift from the pilots of Alexandria to mark the king's wedding. ~~As a wedding present it was a bit late, but at least it was better than getting just another crust.~~ ^{As you may imagine, they gave him a yacht with a crew.}

And there was another naval occasion off the coast of Greece. At Corfu, King George of Greece reviewed his Fleet and watched his warships at exercise. The Greek Navy hasn't been in the world's news for some time and it's interesting to note how large and efficient it is --- especially as they aren't threatening to attack anybody.
