FISHERMEN FROM WESTERN ISLES ARRIVE AT GLASGOW.

Vessels of the Scottish fishing fleet, usually sailing to the far North from the Western Islands, steer an unusual course for the Clyde and tie up at ^a strange anchorage. They have deserted their Northern harbours to bring delegates to the Highland and Industrial Conference which is being held at Glasgow. Treasurer Greenhill representing Lord Provost Dollan received the visitors and welcomed them to this great Scottish centre of industry. There were elderly crofters from the Hebrides and picturesque fishermen who had never before in their lives trod the pavements of a great city. Maybe they feel a little lost so far away, and crave for the misty silence of their Hebridean homes.
