BRITAIN'S POWER STILL GROWS.

on all sides we have evidence that Britain's power is greater now than at any time before; the mighty resources that have been built up over the past year have reached colossal proportions --- and yet they still grow. And all this wealth of men and material is kept in fighting trim. Boxing and other sports fill in the time of waiting before embarkation for overseas. And its a mighty organization to get this army so with smoothly on the move.

The rural scene in the countryside nowadays always has its grim background. While the harvesters are working, there's a metal watchdog inxide on guard.

And stial the fair sex are flocking to the colours --- the W.R.N.S. are recruiting at Alexandra House, Kingsway always scorning the danger of mines and submarines --- they neverals:

fail to bring in the daily harvest of the seas to keep out tables well supplied. And by way of a change they fill a few sandbags on the beach. Whilst on the subject of fish, ---- here are a few glimpses of Billingsgate in the country. At the start of the war the fish market was conducted from several outlying districts --now it has been decided to bring it back to dear old Billingsgate.

BRIAAIN'S POWER STILL GROWS. (2)-

and it may be that some of the locals will be glad to see them go there is been a drought.

Another sea story comes to hand with the departure of survivors of the torpedoed liner Athenia --- the American ship Orizaba called farkkam to take them home --- and here's wishing them better luck second time.

Back to the land --- another glimpse of activity somewhere in England. The army of to-day is very popular --- and every woman knows that even in the tanks an army still marches on its stomach.

Over to Paris --- The gay city is still gay despite the war;

An air raid warning finds the French capital well prepared. The alarm was heard in the small hours of the morning, and although the all clear was not given until three hours later no signs of the rai raiders were seen. It was reported that they were griven back.

Paris takes it all very calmly --- and it's very difficult for a Parisienne to be calm when calle d out of bed just before dawn.

Now for a long hop --- to America --- Uncle Sam never lets up on his arms for defence. All along the Pacific coast the Air R
Force is in constant training, and constant readiness

Machine guns all set --- America's battleplanes are fully p prepared if the need for them dhould arise
