Denny Shute, twice American Champion, is here to show you how to improve your game of golf- and he ought to know. See the airplane inner tube and the ~~four~~ ball-dodger make practice ~~more~~ more interesting- that is to say more interesting for Danny Shute. For developing the bull(s) eye approach, this method is quite a bell-ringer.

SHARPSHOOTERS.

It's a good thing to learn to shoot when you're young, you never know when you'll meet a burglar or the tax collector- anyway ~~the~~ these kids from the other side of the Atlantic believe in trying their hand at sharpshooting. They seem sharp enough- and know how to find the bull. What about this for the young idea?

Father holds a target in his mouth, and he gets away with it.

He's lucky- the next time he may not

After shooting like this there's only one way to do it, really, rather, pick at a hair's width -

DART PUFFER.

Here's another shooting story, and the principle this time is hot air. Harry Robinson of Philadelphia blows darts at a target with rare precision. Watch the last word in dart throwing by our slow-motion camera. Of course there's more than one way to score a bulls eye: ~~there's~~ there's a man from Borneo who blows them through a gun. Then there's the knack of tossing them from the hand. Harry Robinson likes to shoot from between his teeth- at a distance of 40 feet- not the usual 9 feet away. He sends them broadside from his mouth- but here's a trick even Harry never knew he could do.
