

KINGSLEY WOOD IN FRANCE.

608

Sir Kingsley Wood is not satisfied with merely looking after the Air ministry work in England --- he likes to go out and see things for himself on the spot. And here he is with the R.A.F. at one of the aerodromes behind the front lines in France. Sir Kingsley chatted with officers and men of the squadron and inspected several machines.

Among other ~~things~~ places, the Air Minister went into a sort of spider's web and found it likely to be just as dangerous to an enemy fly. Sir Kingsley also spent a considerable time in a discussion with French Air Chiefs.

~~Unusually~~ We've all read a good deal in the newspapers about the weather in France --- they say there's been a good deal of rain. This seems to indicate that what they say is correct. But you can't keep a good air force down --- they even seem to like it. And although it isn't a good day for drying the smalls, here's some of that washing for the Siegfried Line.

The Air Force has proved how good it is <sup>at</sup> ~~for~~ camouflage --- but although there isn't much to be seen from the sky there's plenty to be seen from the ground, if you're shown round by the right people. The Air Minister saw it all --- and he even had a ride on <sup>to</sup> a trap.
