The Royal Air Force carries on. Quiet periods when the routine of the aerodrome is the only activity, burst suddenly into roaring life as fighters skim the ~~ix~~ roof-tops --- returning from a job as watchdogs of the skies. And here --- in a village somewhere in France --- is the result of a fighters' accurate aim. The remains of a Nazi raider, brought down in flames. The German was a Dornier. Two of them came over and two British planes went up to intercept them. One was driven off --- this was the other, shot down by a young New Zealander of the Royal Air Force in France.
