

NEW ZEALAND AND INDIAN TROOPS.

Every week new evidence comes to hand of the unity of the British Empire. In every farthest land, the youth of this great commonwealth of nations has answered the call to arms. From New Zealand come these pictures of manoeuvres at one of the many military camps. ^{Training} ~~Training~~ under war conditions, ready for France or anywhere else. ~~French digging interrupted -- rifles -- machine guns --~~ ~~the mules.~~ New Zealand has all the equipment of the modern army -- including the deadly Bren gun.

Now to France --- these are the first pictures to be released of the arrival of a contingent of Indian troops. Once again these hardy little men from the hills and the plains have come to fight for Britain in their own individual way. And Germany well knows ^{that} there are no more fearless fighters in the world. They have brought to France their own food, their water-carriers and their mules. And the mules don't think much of us.

This rich jewel of the Empire's crown is given without stint to the cause of the Allies. Princes and Rajahs have offered their wealth and their swords --- the sons of the Raj have offered their ~~in~~ strength, and their loyalty to the King Emperor. From Lahore and Calcutta they have come; from Delhi, from Hyderabad and Bhopal; from the Arabian sea to the Bay of Bengal, India stands with Britain.
