CANADIANS MOUNT GUARD.

They came to Britain to help make history for the Empire; and while they were here they made some for London. Canadian troops marched to Buckingham Palace to take over the duties of the Guard.

As they approached the Palace they were headed by the band of the Grenadiers.

French Canadians of the Royal 22nd Regiment. They took over from the Welsh Guards --- the first time that Guard duty at the Royal Palaces had ever been assigned to Canadians. The King and Queen watched the ceremony, no doubt with memories of their happy tour in Canada last year. With their Majesties were the Canadian High Commissioner, Mr Vincent Massey, and General McNaughton, Canadian C.-in-C. in Britain.

Young blood saluted as the sentries changed over with the traditional ceremony --- but there was a departure from tradition.

The orders read by the Corporal to the new guard were spoken in French, also for the first time in the history of Buckingham Palace

Eighty men form the guard for the London Palaces --- every man of them over six feet tall. And they're as smart as any soldiers in the world.

This is another symbol of our unity within the Empire --- together we shall finish the job.
