SHEEP.

High up in Mount Baker National Forest, Washington, sheep herds are moving to pastures anew.

3000 are in this one flock with only a man and 3 dogs to direct and control their movements.

It's incredible the way in which these dogs round up their charges--- they keep them for ever on the move, and it's rare for a laggard to be missed.

It's a pastoral of the mountains, 10,000 feet above the level of the sea.

COLLEGE RODEO.

Californian college boys stage a wild and woolly west desert rodeo, though they really ought to be training for football. Well, this is how they do it. Whatever sort of bucking it is, it's all the same to these hardy American youths.

They'll stop at nothing, and are quite at home at this kind of game.

If this is football homework, they're certainly taking hard it the right way.

First down for the steer, but our young friend's got the old college spirit.
