INDIAN PILOTS.

The Royal Air Force grows and grows. It is with pride that we observe that much of its growth comes from the branches of the great British Commonwealth of Nations. The richest jewel in the Empire's crown has made many gifts towards the British war effort --- not the least to be prized being this latest contribution of young manhood. Mother India's sons have come in loyalty to the King Emperor. They will complete their training as pilots somewhere in Britain before giving a taste of their fighting qualities to the Nazis. Several changes in the senior command of the Royal Air Force have followed the appointment of Sir Charles Portal as Chief of Air Staff. This is Air Vice Marshal W. Sholto Douglas who becomes Air Officer Commander in Chief Fighter Command --- and we wish him as much success as his predecessor.
