QUEEN AND AMBULANCE DRIVERS.

The Queen visited four ambulance stations in a tour of south-west London, accompanied by Lady Halifax and Admiral Sir Edward Evans. Her Majesty chatted with some of these wonderful men and women who drive ambulances during air raids. At the end of ~~the~~ <sup>her</sup> visit the Queen signed the book at one of the stations.

DIAMONE FACTORY IN LONDON.

It's Christmas time --- and if you have forgotten to buy your wife those diamonds you meant to, here's a reminder. Get a few on your way back from paying the income tax. This is a new London factory which is turning our wonderful gems that anybody can buy, with ~~many~~ enough money. Most of them will be sold abroad, of course, to give Britain the valuable foreign currency that helps her war production. And incidentally, in this factory, most of the workers are refugees who have come to Britain as fugitives from Nazi tyranny.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

In a recent raid on London a bomb fell close to the Houses of Parliament, and this damage was done to the House of Commons. ~~It's really quite a triumph for Goering's murder squad to hit something apart from little homes and women and children. But here's a thought for the ~~instants~~. But~~ Wherever the bombs fall makes little difference to the progress of their war. One of the advantages of democracy is that <sup>it represents</sup> ~~representing~~ all the people and you can't win a war <sup>against democracy</sup> unless you beat all the people. And that's a job that'll take more years than you are likely to have, Mr Hitler.
