

ARMY CO-OPERATION AIRMEN.

Sometimes you see these funny-looking planes in the sky and they look like something out of the past twenty years. They're Lysanders; but the men who fly the ~~Lizzies as they call them~~, will tell you that they're first class warplanes. Our cameras called in at a ~~ix~~ training session for machine guns when crews of Lysanders were practising ~~... and no longer study of deadly intensity~~ other ~~xxx~~ method of training air gunners ~~is with this kind of intensity~~ and Jerry knows to his cost how effective ~~this~~ is.

Let's go up with a flight and see how these Lysanders fly

This is the first Canadian Army co-operation unit ready for active service. We still think the Lizzies are funny-looking --- ~~they aren't~~ the beauty of any of the others. But the men who fly them say they're 100% at their particular job --- and ~~that's~~ that's the opinion that counts. They're used for reconnaissance and for dive bombing and ground strafing enemy troops before ~~the~~ army attacks. They have speed and they can turn like a turntable..

Now let's hop over to another Canadian unit --- a squadron of Hurricanes. One of many operating with Britain and ~~is~~ tearing pieces out of Nazi Germany. They're completely self-contained; all the intricate work demanded of an operational squadron is carried out by ~~Canada~~ in Britain

Yes --- it's Canada in Britain. Their spare-time games tell you which side of the Atlantic they come from.

Ever since the war began Canadian airmen have been working with the R.A.F. Every day their numbers increase. Every week the Empire war effort gathers momentum --- ~~&~~ gathers weight.
