

AERODROMES GROW FROM THE MUD.

This picture looks a mess, but out of this mess will evolve something worth having-- The men here are not so much workmen as wizards, for out of this ocean of slosh they are building an aerodrome. There is much work to be done, and it's a question of knowing just where to start out of such an unpromising beginning. But in an incredibly short time, the growth of the aerodrome is everywhere apparent. Progress in the air demands progress on the ground to accomodate it. And it is abundantly clear that man has learnt to bend the forces of Nature to the needs of science. Thus on what ~~was~~ was only a short while ago a barren tract of lumpy ground, has become a smooth-surfaced terminus for planes which cover the length and breadth of the world.
