

ARMS WORKERS AT THE TANKS TATTOO. 800

The watch-word of the moment is Tanks: and this is one of the parades in Britain designed to make us all more tank minded. Bren Carriers took part in a mock battle, playing their individual role in an attack that was exclusively armoured. All this was done for the benefit of munition-workers who ~~for the past months~~ have been making tanks. Turning out the spearhead of modern battle in ever-increasing numbers. It is becoming more obvious every day that only full co-operation between the home front and the fighting services can win this war in a reasonable time. We never imagine that we shall lose ~~this~~ ^{the} war; but we don't want it to drag on for years and years, and tanks are the medium of speedy victory. So the boys and girls from the benches took a ride on the war machine. Workers are in the line of battle just as much as if they rode the tanks in the fight. After the war our grandchildren will ^{be told} ~~hear~~ how Aunty Fanny led the charge on Berlin.
