

SILLY DEVIL RESCUED FROM DEVIL'S TOWER.

He did it for a bet and for publicity; George Hopkins went up in an aeroplane to make a parachute jump on to the top of the Devil's Tower in Wyoming. He leaps at the right moment and lands safely on the top of this huge crag. But of course, having got there he can't get down. ^{That's him on the right - beside the aeroplane. And then} a lot of ~~other~~ people had to go to a lot of trouble to drop food for him and a map showing the only way ~~back~~ ^{back to earth}.

prison without bars Flying above, ^{once more} you see the tiny ~~figure of a fathead in a~~ ^{figure of a fathead in a} ~~the right~~ --- but even with the map he couldn't get down.

He stayed on top of the Devil's Tower for nearly a week. Eventually expert climbers volunteered to risk their own lives to get him down again. ~~And after a lot more trouble they got him.~~ It's a silly story: ~~but it gives you an idea~~ ^{But} What a lovely place to put Mussolini and Hitler after the war: they could stay up there for ever --- telling each other whose fault it was.
