

This is an indication that although we've heard so much lately about sending tanks to Russia, we still have some ourselves. And the armies that are training in Britain for the inevitable battle that is to come --- those armies are training under realistic conditions. Many of our most brilliant commanders were present at this exercise --- and we know that the army to a man is awaiting impatiently the day when manoeuvres give place to the real thing. The army has a long score to settle; that account will be paid in full.

Anti-tank weapons that were so sorely lacking in the battle of France are now available ~~and~~ infantry is trained in the specialised fighting that is needed to dispose of Nazi Panzers.

Germany ^{has} taught the world many new tricks in warfare --- as Germany did in the last war. But the world has learnt the tricks --- not least has Britain learnt them. And when British armoured divisions go into any battle of the future --- we can assume that Germany will learn something about our skill in dive bombing.