COAST WATCHERS IN LIEYA.

In Libya there's an Observer Corps --- a very important sideline for the Army of the Nile. Both during the offensives and during the periods of lull a constant watch must be kept on sea and sky. Bren guns at frequent intervals are the foretaste of the reception a raider is likely to get: and day and night those eyes are looking for trouble; to save our desert armies from attack by surprise

KING AND QUEEN.

The King and Queen have been making another extensive inspection tour of a naval command in the South. The Navy, Marines and Wrens were all present and also units from training with the Royal Navy American Neval officers were also those on thally, on bourd submarine, their Majestice chatter with crews who have been onoured for outstanding gallantry in their hazardous work.
