

INDOOR CIRCUS IN AMERICA.

11 a.m.
28/1/42 W. S. Simon.

D 843

A circus is always a thrill -- so let's see what is going on inside this vast lighted arena.

The queen of the flying trapeze gives a daring display in her leap for life. You've got to keep your eyes skinned to see all the sights at this indoor carnival-- The elephants, as usual, are the life and soul of the party.

3

Then the long and short of it-- freaks in the world of the circus-- hold everyone's attention

At a show like this, it's always the unexpected that happens-- so stand by for the grand finale-- ~~what a wonderful and thrilling~~ ~~than~~ the great human cannon ball. What could be more thrilling than that, and what more darned uncomfortable?

AT HOME AT THE LONDON ZOO.

When our cameraman called in at the London Zoo on a recent wintry day, he was greeted by the sea lion who was at home in an ice-floe. Though surrounded by ice, he didn't care a jot, and after a good look-round, he decided it was a cold world and he went under for a drink. Then a visit to the terrace where the bears were on parade. They looked so ~~nice~~ ^{Snug} and warm in their nice fur coats. They're always hungry and always fawning-- they really have learnt how to sit up and beg properly like good little boys. And though those great paws are outstretched in that gentle weaning way-- it's only cupboard love-- if they were to take you in their arms, it ~~would~~ would be good-bye to all this and all that.

4