THE WORLD AT WAR --- COMMANDO --- THE NEWSREEL RECORD OF BOULOGNE --- BRITAIN'S POLICY OF ATTACK.

Navy

We introduce our story of the Commando raid on Boulogne with ~~with troops who did not take part in it; because they and~~

~~Boulogne are part of~~ Britain's policy of attack; General Marshall of America was here for discussions with Mr. Churchill --- and no doubt found satisfaction in our types of parachute troops.
Bombing too is a big part of our scheme of assault on the Western front ~~and we have some beautiful little bombs to drop on~~

Also watching with interest were Mr. Casey of Commander
Australia and the ~~of~~ of Combined operations --- Lord Louis Mountbatten.

And now we come to the Commandos who took part in the landing at Boulogne: they are receiving instructions from Major Lord Lovat who led them ashore.

These are the but important short hours before they set sail for yet another part of German occupied France ~~we're not telling Hitler~~ whether we're going to invade or not; but bombing and Commando landings are a part of our policy of attack; he'll know the other part later. The Navy's here; but it'll soon be there.

The Boulogne raid was made at night, of course: with speed and silence they're going ashore: ~~but~~ Jerry hasn't spotted them yet.

Verrey lights from the garrison; he's awake! And a hail and of tracer-machine-gun, /tommy-gun splits the night air

(up)

That was all the camera could see: but these are the men who have just been making Hitler nervous; they came through with hardly any casualties after two hours of reconnaissance and damage. This is the officer who wore carpet slippers ~~from London police inspector.~~ Casualties were light, but no such assault can be made without some

So that's another job well done by the Commandos --- made possible once again by the men of the Royal Navy. Hitting here and there along the German-occupied coastline --- confusion of our enemies. And there's plenty more to come.
