Britain has been given the greatest harvest of the century. The fields of Essex, Sussex, Lincolnshire, Cambridge, Norfolk and Northumberland have been chosen at random as typical of the great and good yield of our fertile soil. The grain is safely carried and ^{now is} stocked away: all other perils and ~~dis~~comforts we can endure if this our food is safe. It is truly an encouraging sight.

We have been warned that our food will change because we need fast ships to take the offensive: but with this sure shield from the good earth we shall be a nation fit for victory.
