

There is a signpost --- to Rouen. And then Rouen was retaken too. Retaken from the Huns who held it since that black summer of 1940. What great events will have befallen by the time you see these pictures, no man can say. But for those who doubted if we could ever accept the challenge of total war --- there is this evidence. The new flame-throwing tank, of which these pictures are just released by Censor. War is a foul thing; and nobody in the British Empire wanted war. But from a slow start we have caught up and passed our enemies in the means of winning a war. This weapon, first used by Germans in the last war, is one that has played a great part in our great victories. By finishing this war quickly and completely, we are conferring the greatest possible benefit on mankind.
