

F.F.I. WELCOMED IN LONDON.

Two hundred men and women of the French Forces of the Interior have come to Britain to visit London and other cities. These are the representatives of the citizens of France who carried on the underground fight against the German invaders; and many are still fighting. A group of ordinary French patriots. Their first act in London was the laying of a wreath at the statue of Marshal Foch. You will remember those epic pictures of the fight of the F.F.I. for the liberation of Paris. /

These two hundred symbolise that gallant fight. And among these men are sons who have come straight from a slit-trench at St. Nazaire; these are girls who decoded messages from London in a French cellar --- with Germans living overhead. /
