

Kariba Dam-

Rhodesia-- More pictures of the turbulent Zambesi River which threatened the world's biggest dam at Kariba.

Determined efforts by engineers to raise the last remaining bridge failed- and it tottered and fell ~~with a roar~~ into the swirling waters.

Only a cable now connects the north and south banks.

Ali Khan-

New York-- ~~Mr~~ Arriving at ~~United Nations~~ Headquarters, <sup>is</sup> Prince Aly Khan, Pakistan's new delegate to the <sup>UNO-</sup> ~~United Nations~~.

A familiar figure in world capitals, the Prince (father of the reigning Aga Khan) presents his credentials to Mr Hammarskjold, Secretary-General of the United Nations.

Zoo arrivals

America: First glimpse of the great, big world for a one-day old. No wonder Celia the Camel is a proud mother.

Another sign that Spring is in the air is this baby Tapir, <sup>named</sup> ~~the~~

"Watermelon" He was born with those stripes: but when he grows he will lose them <sup>- even if he's very good.</sup> ~~Little says usual reverse the process.~~

But the stripes certainly made Duke the Tiger jealous. And when a member of the cat family takes to water, you can bet he's hopping mad!

Hockey

Wembley: This schoolgirl invasion turned out to be a world record hockey crowd of 50,000 - packing the Stadium for the International match between England and Scotland.

England were playing in white blouses - and before you could say "Jolly Hockeystick" - they were swarming round the Scottish goal - eager to preserve <sup>their</sup> ~~that~~ unbeaten <sup>Wembley record -</sup> ~~record, at Wembley.~~

England took the lead when Joan Hassall scored the first of her three goals.

A great lone run by Helen Steele brought Scotland back into the game. With that turn of speed, she'd never be late for Assembly. Perhaps he thought Fulham had reached the Final?

Fortified by an ample supply of ice lollies - the fans cheered on the English team - to a resounding five-two victory....
