

Three years ago, Ischia (the romantic island off Naples) cast its spell. A holiday romance. Amelia Eden, the Baronet's daughter, fell in love with Giovanni Borelli - a ferryboat engineer.

The young love triumphed: over family opposition: over ~~language~~ language difficulties. So, with her groom, Amelia joins her Mother, Lady Eden - at a family reunion in the ~~xxxxxxx~~ sunshine island - just before the wedding.

All the world loves a lover: especially the romantic Italians - and the tiny church resembled a foreground as Giovanni the Groom (with one of his four sisters) arrived for the ceremony.

But worse was to follow. Amelia (who chose Ischia because she so wanted a quiet wedding) had to battle her way to the altar. She was escorted by her brother, John (Conservative M.P. for Bournemouth West) deputising for his father.

At one time - the din was so great that Lady Eden threatened to stop the ceremony unless order was restored...

So Amelia (the niece of Sir Anthony Eden) married her ferryboat engineer.. And promptly escaped from Ischia for a quiet honeymoon before sharing life with Giovanna, in a tiny Italian village, on twelve pounds per week.
