Fifty miles North of Stuttgart stands the village of Klinge. It is better-named the "village of love" ..

For it was here that Father Magnani, a German priest, built homes and Gooded family ties for orphaned and refugee children. It began in 1945, when n charge of thousands of refugees. He quickly realised that clothes and food were not enough. After years of privation and often great sorrow, the children needed love and affection. Father Magnani began his youth village. He built a school - where the children learned the Christmas story and kexemed were taught their native tongue. Often begging money from task. welfare organisations, he the leaching For years, they had been the flotsam of post-war Europe ... moved from camp to camp. Hexkwawxhway manded x in excare x and x affection x of x a x x in blax faction x bigs. So he built family homes...with eight to ten children in every house - under the care of a foster mother.

Every three houses had a foster -father - who taught the children and lavished upon them the love and affection needed ... To-day, Klinge is a living monument to a good and kindly Recently, Pire received the Nobel Prize for building refugee villages all over Europe ...

Father Magnani has yet to be recognised. But his reward cannot be counted in monetary values - rather in the contentment of a priest who has tried to follow the path of the Good Shepherd ...

Rut he can have no quealer the thappy faces of the