FOR THOSE IN PERIL.

Air-Sea Rescue - the life saving service of the R.A.F. swings into action as a call for help is received at a Coastal Command Station.

A speck in the Channel, but a fighter pilot whose life the Air-Sea Rescue Service is all-out to save. From the Spotting Spitfire comes a dinghie which will be inflated by a bottle of C.O.2, opened by an automatic switch. Here's where training pays dividends - he knows the routine and, among other things, knows that a wet collar and tie can strangle a man unless he has them off before they shrink. Up goes his distress signal as the Walrus Amphibian comes in to make its rescue.

Figures at the Air Ministry show the record number of lives saved.

Air Sea-Rescue has a young but great tradition behind it. Many an airman owes his life to it. But the story does not end there.

Equally important are the high speed R A.F. launches which hasten to the rescue of those in peril. This section of our story concerns the crew of a Fortress who had to "ditch" their aircraft at the end of a highly successful raid.

Way out at sea that little company of men have flown their ,its, and huddled together to wait for the scouting aircraft, the signals of discovery and the throbbing motors of those launches.

Not difficult to realise how they feel now with the m~~it~~ solid decking beneath them.

Rescued and Rescuers have the final say in this story;
