ON TO ROME.

Every foot of the way to Rome means hard fighting. British troops of the 5th Army shoot their way through ruined villages and towns in which the Germans are fighting rearguard actions. An almost continuous hail of mortar bombs is fired into the Nazi positions.

The Aspremonte mountain range rumbles and rears to the crash of gun-buzzers.

"Long Tom" is an American "heavy" hurling a 95lb shell 15 miles.

Rangers holding the heights overlooking Naples press forward through the wooded slopes.

Leaving a smoke bomb, they lay down a screen as they rush the German Hide-outs.

British Infantry with fixed bayonets move through a vineyard ready to spike every Nazi they come across. One of the grandest sights of this war is a Briton with his Bayonet.
