TOY TRAIN GOES TO WAR.

Pictures of pre-war holiday crowds packing the miniature Romney and Hythe railway at Dymchurch. Believed to be the smallest public railway in the world, the tiny toy train on the Kent Coast carried hundreds of passengers every day over its fifteen inch gauge permanent way. When the expected invasion of Britain swept everything into defence, the little puffer went in there and it came out here, a complete armoured train.

The "Romney Flyer" well armed and manned, took up station to guard the lonely stretch of Kentish Coast which was her's by pride of possession.

The steel-plated midget was fully prepared to take a crack at any rascy Nazi trying to mess about on the shores of Romney, Hythe and Dymchurch.
