This week Pathe's new-view spotlight introduces "A Prime Minister Off Duty." Off-the-record shots of Clement Attlee on a visit to the John Benn Hostel, Stepney. Here he's the guest of Youth delegates from every part of Britain. In his speech, a success story. Lesson; there's a Prime Minister's baton in every youth leaders ruck-sac.

And with a general election four years off - he couldn't be looking for votes. For what his hosts thought, here are their voices from London, Scotland, Durham and Wales.

Youth marches on.

This is Oxford. An ancient city adds another royal ceremony to a past already rich with history.

Attended by the tall rebed figure of Viscount Halifax, Chancellor of Oxford's University, Their Majesties are here to open the new buildings of the world famous Bodleian Library, founded three centuries ago. A technical hitch lightened the occasion. The key broke and the door had to be opened by officials.

Resulting delay brought a smile from the Queen and a swift inquest on the broken key.

Said the King "Never was there greater need for a world wide commonwealth of scholars." Oxford meets that need.
