PRINCESS MARGARET IN PARIS AND VENICE

Venice welcomes Princess Margaret, spending the last few hours of her Mediterranean holiday in the city immortalised by the poet Byron, and famous for gondolas and gergonzola. Along the enchanting canals, the Princess takes a last look at Italy before starting on the journey home ...

Reaching Paris by the night express from Lausanne, she's greeted by the British Ambassador, her host during a four days stay in the French capital. The city forgets even the Four Power Conference as it hails its first Royal visitor from Britain since Princess Elizabeth and Prince Philip's visit a year ago. As she makes her way to the English Church, Paris' welcome is warm and spontaneous. A happy ending to a thrilling holiday.
