POLITICAL LEADERS' BUSY WEEKEND

On his way to receive the Freedom of Worcester, Mr. Churchill is cheered by dense crowds. This is the 36th occasion upon which he has been made a City Freeman. It is at the historic Guildhall that this honour is conferred on him. No visit from Mr. Churchill would be thought complete without the familiar V-sign. Accompanying him to this reception is Mrs. Churchill.

The people of Worcester wait while Mr. Churchill enters the Guildhall to accept the tokens of the City's esteem. He is received by the Mayor - Alderman T.S. Bennett. The Civic Address is ready by the Town Clerk. Accompanying the scroll are gifts of an inlaid table and several pairs of gloves. "But," said Mr. Churchill, "although a confirmed addict of Worcester Sauce, it was not among the gifts officially handed out."

Beatrice Webb House, Dorking, is the setting for a conference called by the Labour Party National Executive Committee. Mr. Morrison, Dr. Edith Summerskill and Mr. Hector McNeil are among the fifty-six representatives attending the conference, which is to formulate Labour policy for the next General Election. Mr. Tom Williams has a word with the Press, while Dr. Summerskill chats with Mr. Morgan Phillips. Mr. George Isaacs' snap-shot is not necessarily indicative of an immediate Snap Election.

Mr. Shinwell, and most of the Cabinet Ministers, are there as all three sections of the Labour Movement discuss a wide range of subjects - not the least among them the matter of housing. Much Talking at Dorking - but strict precautions guard the privacy of the Conference.
