

EISENHOWER TAKES OVER

The architect of victory comes back at the call of the nations of the West. Sheathing the sword, he chose civil life as head of Columbia University. Nominated as President, General Eisenhower refused to oppose his old chief. Now while General Bradley (who commanded under him) is chief of staff in the States, he takes command of the armies of the West. Under him they will be welded into strength. Donning uniform once again, he will build for security, though there was a time when he himself believed a third world war unthinkable.
