- 10. C U. Ike speaking:
'There is no great nation in the world today that deliberately would provoke a global war. A vast and productive industry is necessary to a nation with mountains and quantities of supplies built up before it would attempt any such venture. Economies in all nations except our own, and we know we don't want war, are far too broken and debilitated by world war II to believe that they would deliberately start a war now. 61
