

NEW CARRIER ON TRIALS

H.M.S. "Eagle," Britain's hush-hush aircraft-carrier is ready to begin trials off the Isle of Arran. Eight-hundred feet long from stem to stern, the 37,000-tonner is the 21st ship to bear the name "Eagle" in the Royal Navy. Now, with Captain Guy Willoughby in command, the Navy's largest carrier begins her trials.

Full speed ahead. Below deck are many things too secret to be filmed, until we get to the crew's comforts. This is quite a change from sitting on an up-turned bucket and letting a pal do his worst.

It's cafeteria service in the all-electric galley, and the Chief Cook has no alibis because it's fully automatic.

From his appetite you wouldn't think there's a gale outside, but "Eagle" is designed to keep steady in a sea. Thanks to the experts, there's nothing unpredictable about the way of this "Eagle."
