

CHURCHILL AND KOREA VETS.

After farewells to Mr. Truman in Washington (where Premier and President reached a great measure of agreement) Mr. Churchill accompanied by Vice-President and Mrs. Berkley - met wounded veterans from Korea at the Union station. It was about his last public function before a cold forced him to stay indoors when in New York.

"After shedding your blood in Korea, I have had the pleasure, the privilege, to shake your hands this morning and to compliment you in the part you have played in a memorable act of resistance against tyranny and aggression."

X Prime Minister Winston Churchill, before departing for England, holds the last of a series of important conferences on world problems with President Truman. The two leaders have mapped a strategy of partnership against aggression. Then, at Union Station, Vice President and Mrs. Barkley introduce the Prime Minister to wounded veterans of the Korean War. Mr. Churchill speaks of the significance of the conflict they fought in:
