

WALES v. SCOTLAND

Scotland kick off against Wales at Ninian Park, Cardiff. Last season Wales were morally champions and the Welsh fans were on their toes to cheer on their favourites.

Welshmen soon get excited when Sunderland's Trevor Ford get through and delivered an atomic shot that had Farn wondering where that one came from.

Scotland fought back with typical dourness. Their team had been rebuilt and there were no less than seven Anglo-Scots playing for them. A quick lob draws Shortt out of the Welsh goal, but centre-half Daniels comes to the rescue and gets there first.

Scotland equalised when Blackpool's Brown reached the net. Brown used to live in Cardiff, but his old neighbours didn't give him much of a "welcome home" this day. Farn collects the ball but the tenacious Ford is after him. It's a hot-blooded occasion and there's plenty for the fans to growl about.

After the change of ends, with a goal apiece, Reilly, Scotland's centre-forward "has a go" but his shot rebounds from the upright.

Wales went hotly to the attack. Pathe's Welsh cameraman Bill McConville thought Wales were unlucky, but at the other end our Jack Gemmill thought Scotland were "very superior." It was the great Scottish left-winger, Liddell of Liverpool, who scored the winning goal. With the coolness of fourteen international games he headed in for victory.
