QUEEN MOTHER ATTENDS FASHION PARADE
HAMPSTEAD WITH PRINCESS MARGARET

Queen Elizabeth ~~the~~ Queen Mother and Princess Margaret attend a parade of fashions of the future in the 18th century home of Sir Kenneth and Lady Clarke, at Hampstead. The Incorporated Society of London Fashion designers - the Top, Ten - are staging the show, and many of Britain's leading mannequins are taking part.

Dorothy Spencer models "Pastiche" an evening dress in orange flame and burgundy tulle, designed by Hardy Amies. Cut on classical lines, the fitted bodice is trimmed with vermilion velvet.

The famous model Dolores wears a Norman Hartnell evening dress of white satin with yellow lace applique, embroidered with drop pearls.

Flowers for the fair is a Hartnell motto. This is his "Flowers of the Field" embroidered with poppies, daisies and cornflowers. "A romantic dress for the days gone by" is how he describes it.

From the Victor Stiebel house comes this elegant evening dress in white slipper satin, embroidered with black net braiding.

Grace and sophistication are the keynotes of the Top Ten's Royal Show.
