PATHE NEWS ON HOLIDAY.

In search of holiday picture news, Pathe cameramen began at Blackpool Tower, looking down upon the fabulous fun-town. Let's get away from the cold war and the headlines for a minute or two and go holidaymaking with the world and his wife. Britain's in full production and holidays were never earned. Up North they make for Blackpool and Blackpool's made for a champion time whatever the weather.

From Lancashire and Yorkshire they pour into Blackpool determined to have a grand holiday - and everything's off the ration. This, for instance, it's not North country rely-poly, it's Blackpool rock - but we still don't know how they get the name right through the middle. We sent another cameraman to Brighton. London by the Sea, they call it, but this was one of the days when most Londoners were staying at home.

We told him not to film bathing beauties but it's an occupational weakness with cameramen and he found these Brighton Belles irresistible.

And our American cameraman had the same idea. But at least he had a new angle - a dainty dish who might have just dropped in on a flying saucer. This is America's idea of swimsuits to come, but they're still "filled in" the good old way.

We thought this came out of the Pathe library because we've been filming bathing girls since pictures began to move, but bloomers like these are the latest fashion across the Atlantic.

There was something new in California, though. Take-off time for a skiing bird-men. "go fly a kite" some-one said, and he took 'em at their word. Water-ski-ing is catching on fast in Britain, but so far we haven't got around to this - Whoops!-----wizard prang!

Ready for another ration, back he comes for more. O.K. to take-off "Checks away".

Now comes the tricky part. Down, Down, down he comes - and a perfect two-point landing.

Our camaras cross the world - and even the Japanese are on holiday. Every year they hold a festival of kite-flying - though some of them seem to be new at the game! They've held this display in Japan for about 300 years - and one or two have been there since the first performance.

Back to London to greet the Junior Ambassador special. America has sent us 48 of her youngsters - a boy from every State. The Variety Club organized this trip along with Bill Boyd better known as Kopalong Cassidy. With these 48 British boys as guides and pals, these lads from the States are over here to get to know us and see our country. This should add up to the Goodwill Mission of year.

After arriving at London Airport the Junior Ambassadors met the Lord Mayor of London and set off on a nation-wide tour. In Hyde Park there was a Review, of the Police, when men and women of the force from all over Britain paraded before the Queen and Prince Philip. Riding behind the Land Rover is Sir John Nott Bower, mounted on Winston, the horse the Queen rides at Trooping the Colour ceremonies. For the Police this is their first Royal Review for nearly 20 years. So often do the police have the task of controlling the crowds when the other services take the limelight that it's a special pleasure to pay tribute to the men in blue. Police dogs, have been making headlines news in recent months. There are 42 of them in the parade. Also represented are the mobile police.

Behind the massed pipe bands come divisions from North of the Border.

The following day, it's back to work for them. Another royal engagement takes them to Buckingham Palace to control the holiday crowds and traffic as guests come to attend the first Royal garden party of the season.

Right down the Mall stretches a line of limousines. About 8,000 guests have been invited to the party, and holidaymakers make the most of this chance to spot the celebrities. Among the distinguished personalities are many from overseas - not everyone could be invited to the party so our cameras take you into the grounds of the Palace. Telephoto lenses bring the guests into close-up, as we record the elegant scenes from the Palace roof.

The Queen and her husband move among the guests, chatting informally.

The Queen Mother wears a grey chiffon dress overprinted with carnations. Fashion experts agree that this is probably the best-dressed garden-party for many years.

Now from this quiet sunny afternoon scene set in the garden of a London Palace. We return to the crowded beaches of Blackpool. There's happiness in numbers and it's a paradise for millions of people to laze on the sands and have nothing to think about but the next meal -- —-or pretty girls—-or handsome men. This chap coming along the promenade now, so suave, so elegant, so debonaire. That's him Terry Thomas inhaling Blackpool's bracing air.

Good show!
