CARIBBEAN - CALYPSOS ENCHANT THE PRINCESS MARGARET:

In warm Caribbean sunshine, to the welcoming cheers of thousands of children's voices, Her Royal Highness Princess Margaret drives round Queen's Park Oval in Trinidad. The Princess, smiling warmly as she waves in acknowledgment, is greeted by children of many races - East Indian and Negro, Chinese and English, Spanish and Portuguese - all of whom live happily together in the islands of the West Indies.

But it is not always sunny in the sunshine islands. A tropical rainstorm drenches hundreds who wait in the Streets of Port of Spain for a glimpse of the Princess as she drives by.

Government House is bathed in sunshine again for a garden party attended by Her Royal Highness. About fourteen hundred guests have been invited.

The Princess, cool and serene, wears a gown of white lace and a small yellow nylon hat.

Later, as the sun goes down, the Princess takes her place in the grounds of Government House for a carnival by local dancers and singers.

To the exciting rhythm of their own music, the people of the Caribbean show their affection for the "Dolly Princess".
